HE THOUGHT HE HAD 'EM

It was evident he had been on a long and arduous spree. His face was red, his eyes were bleary, and his hands shock. He stepped unsteadily from the pavement into a Union line car. The seats were occupied by ladies who were out shopping, and he had to stand. He clung to a strap, and tried hard to assume a calm, dignified manner, but his nerves were unstrung, and his assumed stiffness became limberness whenever the car stopped, started or turned a corner. Yet he seemed to be satisfied that he impressed the ladies as a sober, selfpossessed man, whereas his pitiable condition was apparent to all.

His eyes fell on one of the panels over the window, where the advertisement of an express company was framed, with a horse's head so hung in a central opening that it moved with every jog of the car. He did not know that such figures are a new device in horse-car advertising. He started, with widely-opened eyes, at the nodding head of the beast and then resolutely turned away, determined that what he thought was a slight touch of delirium tremens. In another panel was a tailor's advertisement, and he began to read it, hoping to divert his mind from the queer fancy about the horse. He perused the first printed line, which led his eyes along a picture of a shoomaker seated on a bench at work. Suddenly, as the car ran over a stone, the man in the picture moved his arms, as though sewing the boot in his lap, and nodded his head violently. The drunkard in-voluntarily ejaculated: "Ah-ah!," and stared in horror. The ladies regarded him wonderingly.

A stretch of smooth track made the ger quiet, and the perturbed passenger, with a strong effort, regained his composure. He took a firmer grip of the strap, pulled himself up into a very upright attitude, and coughed violently, so as to make the ladies think that his ejaculations had been caused by some-thing wrong in his throat. The color of his tace, which had deepened to purple, was slowly turning to scarlet, when he sawa placard of a mustard manufacturer, bearing the trade-mark-a cow. The car joited, and the cow,s head and tail swayed gently and naturally. The sight doubtless destroyed the drunkard's last lingering doubt, for he cried: "I've got 'em!" and started for the door. Casting his eyes at the pictures, he saw that shoemaker was sewing faster than before, and the horse was nodding with renewed vigor, the cow was shaking her head and tail with victous energy, and even the mouth of a dog in another panel was rapidly opening and shutting. "Yes, I've got 'em sure," he said, as he brushed past the conductor and jumped from the car.—[Philadelphia Times.

mold, and a very small cup containing a few drops of water for the insects to drink out of and bathe in. Their food consists of two kinds of fish, called manyu and kut-yu. Insects called loo-kum-chung tun-tsit-chung, and pin-tam-chung are occasionally given to them. They get honey to strengthen them, and other items of their diet are boiled chestnuts and boiled rice. For two hours every night a female cricket is placed in the pot with the male. Smoke is supposed to be injurious to their health, and the rooms in which they are kept must be perfectly free from it. A charm or mystic scroll to avert evil influences is some times placed on the cricket's pot. If they are sick from overeating, red insects called hun-chung are given them. If the sickness arises from cold, they get mosquitoes; if from heat, shoots of the green-pea plant. Chuk-tip, or bamboo butterflies, are given for difficulty in breathing. At the cricket-pit which the Chinese call Lip, the insects are matched according to size, weight, and color. The stakes are in some cases very large. is, however, generally supposed by the Government that they consist of presents of sweet cakes. A cricket which wins many victories is called Shan-lip, or conquering cricket, and when it dies it is placed in a small silver coffin and buried. Crickets which display great fighting powers are not unfrequently seld for

A FABLE.—There once lived in a farm yard a great many roosters and hens. Now, it chanced one morning that a young hen with a very fine voice began to crow. Thereupon all the roosters burried together and solemnly declared that there was nothing so dreadful as a crowing hen. Now, there was in the yard a rooster who had always been feeble and could only cackle, but when the hen mentioned this the roosters shook their heads and said, 'Females do not understand logic." Moral.—There is a great deal of difference between a cackling rooster and a crowing hen.—[Lillie Devereaux Blake.

THE LEOS OF THE CHURCH.

The accession of Cardinal Pecci to the Pontificate as Leo XIII. has called up among our Catholic exchanges some reminiscences of his predecessors of that Leo I., surnamed the Great, who reigned from 440 to 461. He saved Rome from Attila and imposed conditions on the conquering Vandals. He was a native of Tuscany and was the forty-sixth suc-cessor of St. Peter. Leo II. was a Si-cilian, and ruled less than a year, in 682. Leo III, was a Roman who reigned from 795 to 816, and was canonized. He crowned the Emperor Charlemagne and founded some of the finest churches in Rome. He was the ninety-ninth Pope. Leo IV. was the 106th occupant of St. Peters chair; born at Rome, reigned from 847 to 855 and entered into sainthood. He routed the Saracens in A. D. 849 and captured the Saracens in A. D. SiV and captured booty enough to rebuild the walls of the city. Leo V. and VI, had very brief reigns, the former less than two months and the latter less than a year. Leo the VII, held the office of Supreme Pontiff for three and a half years. He was the 130th Pope. Leo VIII was an anti-Pope for two years and died in 965. Leo the IX. was a native of Germany and was the fifth of the name who was canonized. He reigned from 1049 to 1054. Leo X. was a Florating each of Lorenzo de Medici who entine, son of Lorenzo de Medici, who ruled as Pope eight years, from 1513 to 1521. He was a remarkable man, and won renown by his encouragement to literature and art. His name is associ-ated with Michael Angelo and Raphael, and he made creat efforts to complete St. Peters. He distinguished himself also by efforts to stop brigandage, to im-prove the charitable institutions of Italy and to give Rome an efficient police. Nevertheless his administration increased the abuses and license that prepared the way for Luther and his reformation.

Leo XI. did not live to enjoy the bonors and emoluments of the office. He died twenty-seven days after his accession. He was a Florentine, and was elected Pope in 1605. The last Leo XII., was a native of Spoleto, and reigned from 1823 to 1829—five years, four months and thirteen days—so that only two of the Leos of the Church held the Pontificate for any reasonable length of time. These were the second and third, who reigned twenty-one years each. After the long life and reign of Pius IX. ordinary periods of five and ten years will appear

A STARVING MAN'S FEAST .-- A man named Paquette was engaged in one of the Upper Ottowa shanties as a cook, but, neglecting his personal appearance, the men insisted upon his being discharged. He left the shanty after having supplied himself with sufficient provisions to last him until he reached the first farmhouses. On his second day out a blind ing snow storm came on, and he lost his way. At the end of the third day his provision bag gave out, and he had not the slightest idea of his wheresbouts. He walked on, however, in the hope of reaching some welcome goal. On the seventh day he had grown so weak that he was unable to walk any further. He laid himself down on a snowbank, and made up his mind that there he had to perish. He had been there but a few perish. He had been there but a few minutes when a horse and cutter came in view, and he had barely sufficient strength left to hail the driver. He suc-In some parts of China crickets are as regularly trained for combat as English puglisits, the method being as follows:

Before medical aid could be summoned the unfortunate man had expired. On an examination being made, it was found death was caused by excessive eating.— [Toronto Globe.

> AN ADVENTURE WITH WOLVES .- Three little girls, from six to eight years of age, up at Manville, on the Wisconsin Central Railroad, says a special from Neenab, Wisconsin, wandered into the woods last week and got lost. Night came on, and the little ones finally, at about midnight, came to a haystack in a clearing. They pulled out some of the hay and made a hole big enough to crawl into, when, to their horror, several large wolves came howling about them and snapping their hungry jaws in anticipation of the hu-man feast before them. The children oried and screamed in their terror as the wolves came nearer and nearer. Finally the oldest of the children, while on her the oldest of the children, while on her knees praying for herself and little sisters, happened to remember reading that fire would frighten away wild animals, and remembered also that she had a few matches in her pocket. In a moment she pushed the children out from the stack and set fire to the dry hay. The effect was magical. In instant the flames shot skyward, the wolves ran off in a rage of disappointment, and, soon after, as the disappointment, and, soon after, as the children were warming the chilled blood in their veins, their parents and friends came up to the rescue, attracted thither by the light from the burning haystack.

Her vagaries in Spain attracted the attention of the British Consul, and she was finally sent home, with her mare, to her friends. THE YOUNG HEIR.

She had invited him to stop to supper, and he was a trying to appear easy and unconcerned, while she was on her prettiest behavior. "Have you used the sugar, John?" inquired the mother, in a winning manner.

"John don't want no sugar," ejaculated the young heir, abruptly.

"Why not?" inquired the father, curiously, while John in his surprise, swallowed a bit of toasted crust, and nearly cut his throat open.

"Cos he don't," explained the heir, in an artful manner, "I heard him tell Mary last night-"

"You keep still," interrupted Mary, in a hysterical manner, while the young man caught his meath in dismay. "I heard him say," persisted the heir, with a dreadful eagerness, "that she was so sweet he wouldn't never use no more sugar any more-an' he kissed her, an said I'll tell. an'-" The young heir was lifted out of the room by his ear, and the supper finished in moody silence.—[Pittsburg Gazette.

San Antonio, (Texas), April 14.-Today "Old George," an African lion, was pitted against the bull that vanquished a lioness a week ago. As soon as in the cage, the bull bounded toward the lion. Catching him under the belly, he threw him and pinned him to the ground. The bull made a second charge, again pinning the lion firmly to the ground. The final assault was terrific. He gored the lion, and then with a toss sent him whirling through the air. The managers then put the lioness in. She fought shy, but the bull rushed around the arena, tail up and head down, chasing the two huge lions, tossing one after another over his head or trampling them under foot. At times the bull seemed to be standing on his head on the bodies of the prostrate animals, which filled the air with their roaring. It was evident that the lions stood no chance. The lion had several deep wounds, while the lioness, too fleet to allow the buil to pin her to the ground, fled to the cage. The buil was finally lassoed. He is one of the most extraordinary fighters ever seen.
